

Three primary loan types:

A: Business Optimization loan. Often the first loan request comes under this category. This type of loan might consist of various items, such as high interest or old debt consolidation, accounts payable, maybe some capital and a little extra for smoother operations.

B: Business Expansion Loan. Normally after the optimization process, that often helps to bring to focus what could be some healthy business expansion. Business expansion loans are an important part of a healthy business, and will pay for themselves.

C: Business Operational Loans. These loans are the life blood of a business. They provide stability and smooth operations, which makes for a lot less stress and last minute desperate decision making. These include credit lines and inventory projections and other important aspects of business operations.

Note: It's important to have a good understanding of each type and the importance of not using one type to facilitate the other.

Information Flow Chart: From field to office, should be clean, efficient and well documented.
